Federal Report Says Hoover Barred Trial for Klansmen in '63 Bombing

Finds F.B.I. Director Blocked Prosecution Twice After Agents Named 4 Suspects in Fatal Alabama Blast

By HOWELL RAINES

Special to The New York Times

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — J. Edgar Hoover blocked prosecution of four Ku Klux Klansmen identified by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation as the bombers who killed four black children at the 16th Street Baptist Church here in 1963, according to a Justice Department report.

As a result, it was 14 years before one of the Klansmen, Robert E. Chambliss, was convicted of murder. The conviction came five years after the death in 1972 of Mr. Hoover, who was director of the F.B.I. The other three Klansmen identified as alleged accomplices have never been indicted.

The report, obtained by The New York Times, also discloses that a fifth suspect in the bombing was hired by the F.B.I. as a paid informer two months after the children died, despite polygraph, or lie-detector, results that convinced bureau agents that he had been involved in the crime.

The Klansman worked for the F.B.I. for two years even though the bureau considered him so dangerous that, in 1964, it warned the Secret Service to keep him under surveillance as a threat to the President, the report states. In addition, it says that field agents knew the informer engaged in attacks on blacks while on the bureau's payroll.

The disclosures are contained in a 302-page document compiled by a Justice Department panel assigned to investigate separate but related allegations involving another F.B.I. informer, Gary Thomas Rowe Jr. The department study was begun in an effort to determine whether Mr. Rowe was involved in racial crimes while he was on the payroll as the F.B.I.'s chief informer inside the Birmingham Klan in the 1960's.

The report of the Rowe Task Force was completed seven months ago, but the Justice Department has refused to release it. An official said its release could prejudice an impending trial of Mr. Rowe, who is under indictment for murder in the 1963 death of Viola Gregg Liuzzo, a white civil rights marcher from Detroit. However, there is speculation, some of it within the Justice Department, that the report is being withheld because the Senate Judiciary Committee is drafting a new F.B.I. charter that could impose stricter rules on the use of informers.

No Evidence on Killings

The task force of four lawyers reported that F.B.I. agents knew about and apparently covered up Mr. Rowe's involvement in nonfatal attacks on blacks. But the lawyers added that there was "no evidence from F.B.I. files" to support allegations that Mr. Rowe was also involved in the bombing of the 16th Street Baptist Church. What the task force did find were bureau documents showing the previously undisclosed role that Mr. Hoover played in blocking prosecution in the case, which involved the largest number of deaths in a single incident in the civil rights movement era in the South.

The report shows that by December 1964, the Birmingham F.B.I. office had made what one of Mr. Hoover's top aides called "a significant breakthrough" in the case. Field agents had eyewitness testimony from three persons who said they saw Mr. Chambliss and three associates near the church about eight hours before the bomb exploded.

"The Birmingham field office urged the bureau to present this evidence to the Department of Justice in order to obtain a prosecutive opinion," the report states, "but Director Hoover overruled, explaining that the 'chance of successful prosecution . . . is very remote'."

The report states that, five months later, the Birmingham office tried again, assuring Mr. Hoover that it had strong evidence, "that the bombing was the handiwork of former Klansmen, Robert E. Chambliss, Bobby Frank Cherry, Herman Frank Cash, Thomas E. Blanton Jr." and probably a fifth man, now deceased.

Climate of Outrage Cited

The memorandum further argued that the case should be tried in an Alabama state court "due to the climate of public opinion favoring prosecution." This apparently meant that white outrage over the murder of children was so great that the usual difficulties in trying racial cases in Birmingham would not be a problem. The F.B.I.'s Special Agent in Charge at Birmingham asked for permission to meet with the United States Attorney and the local prosecutor, as well.

Mr. Hoover responded that "the chance of prosecution in state or Federal Court is very remote," according to the task force report, and he ordered that no meeting take place with the prosecutors.

Moreover, the task force concluded, Mr. Hoover saw to it that the Justice Department received only limited information. The report said that, on a note to an aide, Mr. Hoover wrote, "We must not give a 'blow-by-blow' account" to the Justice Department "because it will appear in The [Washington] Star or The Saturday Evening Post."

In another F.B.I. memo, Mr. Hoover is quoted as upbraiding his staff for telling the Justice Department too many details about the investigation. "All we should have told the department," he said, "was that we had already augmented our staff at Birmingham and not given details." In the end, the task force found, the full account of what the F.B.I. knew about the bombing was never passed to Mr. Hoover's Justice Department superiors.

Account of Bombing

"Consequently," the task force wrote, "the church bombing case never even reached a grand jury until 1977." As it happened, the Alabama trial jury that convicted Mr. Chambliss in 1977 heard less direct evidence than was available to Mr. Hoover in 1964, when the Director ruled against prosecution.

In describing the information that went to Mr. Hoover, the report provides the most detailed account to come to light of how the F.B.I. believed the bombing took place. The account was based on F.B.I. interviews with two Birmingham men who knew the Klansmen and who appear in the report under the pseudonyms Dale Tarrant and Abingdon Spaulding.

They told the bureau of seeing the four Klansmen near the church at 2 A.M., about eight hours before a dynamite bomb went off during Sunday services. It was alleged that Mr. Blanton was at the wheel and Mr. Chambliss in the back seat of a car that drove away while either Mr. Cash or Mr. Cherry approached the church "carrying something by a handle."

The report states that four or five minutes later, one of the witnesses saw the car a block away "with Chambliss, Blanton and a third individual, presumably Cash or Cherry, waiting inside." The witness, Mr. Tarrant, then saw the fourth man coming toward the car from the church.

Confirmation by Witness

The report said this account was confirmed in part by a third witness, Kirthus Glenn of Detroit, who said she saw Mr. Chambliss sitting near the church in a car she later identified as belonging to Mr. Blanton. Mrs. Glenn was a key witness in the 1977 trial that sent Mr. Chambliss to prison for life. The names of the other three men surfaced in the investigation and at the trial of Mr. Chambliss, but no charges were filed against them.

The report notes that Mr. Tarrant has since recanted his statement to the F.B.I. and that a polygraph test later cast doubt on his story. But the report, noting that his story was independently confirmed by Mrs. Glenn's, suggests that fear of Klan reprisals may have caused Mr. Tarrant's switch. At the time Mr. Hoover ruled that the case was not ready for trial, one F.B.I. report indicates, Mr. Tarrant was willing to testify.

Mr. Chambliss and the three others that the task force report identifies were members or close associates of Eastview 13 Klavern, the violent Klan cell here that Mr. Rowe infiltrated. The report shows that Mr. Rowe did not have extreme racial views when asked by the F.B.I. to join the Klan in 1960. But as a member of Klan "action squads," he soon became involved in violent attacks on blacks that his F.B.I. control agents, or "handlers," ignored or failed to report, according to the task force.

Field agents told the task force that violence against blacks was essential, if regrettable, to maintaining an informer's cover as a militant segregationist. This theory allowed for the hiring of the informer who was reported to the Secret Service. He appears in the task force report under the pseudonym "Huey Lipscomb." His real name, according to other documents obtained by The Times, was John Wesley Hall. Now deceased, Mr. Hall was a convicted felon known by the Klan nickname of "Nigger."

Value in Violent Nature

Mr. Hall's agent "handler," Robert Murphy, told the task force that Mr. Hall's value as an informer lay in his violent nature. "If you want to catch fish," Mr. Murphy said, "you've got to go into the water."

F.B.I. documents make it clear that this view was shared in Washington. The bureau headquarters was informed when Mr. Hall was first contacted as a potential informer that agents in Birmingham believed that Mr. Hall "undoubtedly participated in some of Birmingham's minor bombings."

At the time of Mr. Hall's hiring, Mr. Hoover's office had also been informed that Mr. Hall had taken a polygraph test that indicated he "has knowledge of the bombing of 16th Street Baptist Church and may have participated in some way in the bombing or the planning thereof."

Mr. Hoover's office had also been informed that Mr. Hall had once volunteered to kill the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, the city's leading black civil rights leader, as part of a Klan assassination plot exposed by Mr. Rowe. F.B.I. headquarters in Washington also had on file a report that Mr. Hall was part of an aborted plot to blow up an integrated Holiday Inn in Knoxville, Tenn.

Warnings Said to Be Futile

Mr. Hall was candid with his F.B.I. contacts in Birmingham. He told the agents who recruited him that he had transported for Mr. Chambliss dynamite that might have been used to blow up the church, the task force report said. He also assured agents that while he would avoid major acts of violence, he was "not now averse to 'knocking a nigger on the head.'"

Even so, the task force found, there is no record in F.B.I. files that agents advised Mr. Hall "not to take part in violence or that they ever considered terminating him after learning that he admitted having done violence to blacks." Warnings would have been futile, Mr. Murphy told the task force. "It just was not in the man's constitutional makeup," he said, "to not engage in violence."

In lieu of warnings, Mr. Murphy said, he adopted the policy of reporting all details of Mr. Hall's violence except "how much blood ran out of the wound."

The task force report offers little evidence to indicate that the F.B.I. might have signed up Mr. Hall as an informer in hopes of convicting him. Mr. Rowe, for instance, told the F.B.I. that Mr. Hall was involved in the bombing of a black lawyer's home and in the explosion on Sept. 25, 1963, of two shrapnel bombs apparently intended to kill blacks and police officers, the task force report said. But these charges seem to have generated little, if any investigative activity. A report that Mr. Hall struck a white tractor driver with a battery cable was dismissed as a matter for the local police. Once Mr. Hall became an informer, efforts to explore his role in the church bombing seemed to lessen, according to F.B.I. documents examined by the task force.

$420 Paid Over 2 Years

Mr. Hall was a good enough informer for the Birmingham office to ask Washington to upgrade him from probationary to full informer status. In two years, Mr. Hall received $420 from the F.B.I., a pittance compared with the $22,000 Mr. Rowe received. But it was Mr. Hall, unaware that Mr. Rowe also worked for the F.B.I., who warned the bureau that Mr. Rowe might be planning the violence he was hired to monitor.

Mr. Hall told the F.B.I. that Mr. Rowe was one of three members on Eastview's Kloman, or security committee, the task force found. According to Mr. Hall, "any violence which came from Eastview Klavern 13 would have to be okayed by all three of these individuals," including Mr. Rowe. Mr. Hall added that the year in which Mr. Rowe held this power was 1963, when, according to the F.B.I., present or former Eastview members and their associates bombed the 16th Street Church.

The task force could find no record that the bureau ever investigated to see if Mr. Rowe, in fact, held veto power over Klan violence. Nor could the task force find any evidence that the F.B.I. ever investigated another tip about Mr. Rowe from Mr. Tarrant, the informer who provided the main information about the bombing. He listed Mr. Rowe among 11 Klansmen who, while not direct participants, "had knowledge" of the church bombing.

In 1977, when the Alabama authorities reopened the church-bombing case, Mr. Rowe voluntarily took two polygraph tests that seemed to confirm what Mr. Tarrant told the F.B.I. in 1964. One examiner said Mr. Rowe "showed strong and consistent unresolved deception responses" when he denied being with the men who placed the bomb. A second examiner, selected by Mr. Rowe, concluded that his "deceptive" answers were of the kind seen on the polygraph "when a person is withholding vital information" about a crime rather than covering his own participation.

But The Rowe Task Force report makes no mention of the polygraph tests, which are in the files of Alabama investigators contacted by the task force.

F.B.I. COVER-UP SEEN IN 60'S KLAN ATTACKS

Justice Dept. Study Finds Agents
Ignored Violence by Informer

By HOWELL RAINES

Special to The New York Times

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation knew about and apparently covered up involvement in violent attacks on blacks, civil rights activists and journalists by its chief paid informer inside the Ku Klux Klan in the early 1960's, according to a Justice Department report.

But department investigators found no conclusive evidence to support allegations that the informer, Gary Thomas Rowe Jr., was also involved in a series of racial killings while on the bureau payroll from 1960 to 1965, according to the report, which was obtained here by The New York Times.

The investigators found that Mr. Rowe was a leader in the Klan beatings here of Freedom Riders in 1961 in the incident that ushered in three years of violent racial confrontation in Birmingham.

The report also criticizes the bureau for failing to protect the Freedom Riders after its Director, J. Edgar Hoover, was informed in advance about the ambush and was informed that Mr. Rowe, armed with a lead-weighted baseball bat, would lead one of the Klan attack squads.

The Justice Department investigation of Mr. Rowe began in 1978 after The Times reported that the Birmingham police suspected him in the 1963 church bombing that killed four black girls and that Mr. Rowe had told the Alabama authorities he had killed a black man in 1963 and the F.B.I. had covered it up.

Griffin B. Bell, the Attorney General in 1978, also ordered investigators to determine if Mr. Rowe was involved in the murder of Viola Gregg Liuzzo, a civil rights demonstrator from Detroit, for which he was indicted when the Alabama authorities reopened their inquiry into the 1965 slaying.

Seven-Month Delay

The four lawyers assigned by Mr. Bell to the Rowe investigative force submitted their 302-page report seven months ago. But the Justice Department refused to release it for a variety of reasons that a department official said included confidentiality, a change in Attorneys General and concern about prejudicing any trial involving Mr. Rowe.

The delay led to speculation, including some from department sources, that the report had been withheld because the Senate Judiciary Committee was drafting a new charter for the bureau. The department was said to fear that disclosures of illegal conduct by Mr. Rowe could lead Congress to impose stricter rules on the use of paid informers.

The investigative force found that the bureau had no clear guidelines in the 1960's prohibiting violence by informers, but, noting that such rules were imposed in 1975, it made no new recommendations on the handling of informers.

In their report, the investigators drew no absolute conclusions as to Mr. Rowe's guilt or innocence in racial killings.

The report asserts that the investigators found "no evidence" to support Mr. Rowe's contention that he shot a black man in self-defense in a 1963 race riot in Birmingham. However, the report confirms that as early as 1965 Mr. Rowe had told one of his "handlers," or control agents, that such a death took place, and it confirms that the bureau did not investigate the matter.

Veto on Klan Violence

Similarly, the investigators "discovered no evidence from F.B.I. files linking Rowe to the church bombing or suggesting that the F.B.I. ever considered him a suspect." But some of the force's discoveries raise questions about the "no evidence" finding and the bureau's behavior.

For example, the investigative force found that the bureau did not investigate a report from a Klan source that Mr. Rowe had veto power over all violence planned by the Klan's Eastview 13 Klavern in 1963, the year members, former members and associates of the klavern allegedly bombed the 16th Street Baptist Church. The report makes no mention of the fact that Mr. Rowe twice failed polygraph, or lie-detector, tests in which he denied a role in the bombing.

In the Liuzzo slaying, the report cautiously asserts that the bureau and the Justice Department never suspected that Mr. Rowe fired the fatal bullet when the Detroit woman died in gunfire from a car carrying Mr. Rowe and three fellow Klansmen. Mr. Rowe was the Government's key witness in the trials that sent his companions to prison. The convicted Klansmen have testified that Mr. Rowe fired the fatal shot, and Mr. Rowe failed a polygraph test to which he submitted voluntarily on an ABC News tele-

Mr. Rowe, who lives in Savannah, Ga., under a new identity provided by the Justice Department, is fighting extradition to Alabama for trial on a first-degree murder charge in the Liuzzo killing. Mr. Liuzzo's children are suing the Government on the allegation that the bureau, by allowing its informer to participate in criminal conduct, contributed to their mother's death.

Different Accounts of Slaying

The investigative force's report cited "jarring discrepancies" in Mr. Rowe's accounts of Mrs. Liuzzo's death, but it stated no conclusion because of the impending murder trial.

The report is more conclusive as to Mr. Rowe's involvement in nonfatal Klan attacks. In general, the investigative force supports Mr. Rowe's contention that bureau agents initially warned him not to become involved in violence but later ignored or accepted his participation in Klan "missionary work" as essential to maintaining his cover. Field agents apparently covered up Mr. Rowe's violence, the report concludes, by failing to report it to their superiors and by disregarding indications of illegal conduct.

While unable to measure "the true extent" of Mr. Rowe's violence, the force documented six occasions when agents had clear reports of his assaults. Efforts to control Mr. Rowe were uneven. Bureau officials, for example, insisted at one point that he resign as a leader, but not as a member, of a Klan "action squad." But Mr. Hoover ignored a report that Mr. Rowe helped "beat up several Negroes" at an integrated park only 10 days after the director cautioned against instigation of violence by informers.

"Reports that Rowe was deeply involved in Klan violence apparently never triggered investigations into precisely what he was doing with his Eastview associates," the task force report states. "As long as he was providing good intelligence, the Birmingham field office appeared willing to overlook Rowe's own involvement."

"While the files do not say so specifically," the report says, "it seems clear that he was simply too valuable to abandon."

Freedom Rider Incident

The centerpiece of the report is a description, based on F.B.I. records, of the Freedom Rider incident of May 14, 1961, in which members of the Congress of Racial Equality were assaulted at the Trailways Bus Station in Birmingham. The account offers a conclusion on the central question whether Mr. Rowe, who received $22,000 from the bureau from 1960 to 1965, ever instigated the Klan violence he was hired to observe.

The investigators found that "of the hundreds gathered for the CORE bus arrival, Rowe was one of the handful most responsible for the violence at the bus station."

The evidence available to an agent "within hours of the incident," the report said, "was such that it would have been difficult for him not to have known the full extent of Rowe's involvement." It adds, "However, there is nothing in F.B.I. files which indicates he brought this information to the attention of Birmingham's Special Agent in Charge or Headquarters." In The Times's copy of the report, the name of the agent to whom evidence was available is deleted, as are the names of three other agent "handlers."

According to the investigative force, Mr. Rowe was among the Klansmen who attacked George Webb, a black man waiting in the terminal to meet his fiancée. Mr. Rowe was photographed as he held Mr. Webb while others beat the man. The report said the same group chased the newspaper photographer and beat him unconscious and then confronted a second photographer who had filmed the beating of the first.

Street Fight With Blacks

The second photographer later identified Mr. Rowe as the man who took away his camera. But he credited Mr. Rowe with preventing another man from beating him with a pipe, the report said.

The report states that Mr. Rowe and two other men rushed a radio reporter and that Mr. Rowe kicked out his automobile window so a microphone could be ripped from the dashboard. Then, the reporter was jerked from the car, thrown to the ground and slammed against a wall, the report says. Mr. Rowe, evidently armed by this time with a blackjack, swung at the reporter and, Mr. Rowe later assured the bureau, missed.

Later that evening, the report says, Mr. Rowe returned to the bus station and, in a street fight with a group of black men, suffered a throat cut that required eight stitches.

The investigative force found clear evidence that F.B.I. agents in Birmingham knew that Mr. Rowe was involved in the violence. The bureau, for example, gave him $50 for medical expenses from the fight and a $125 bonus "for services rendered." Other evidence includes Mr. Rowe's admission, in bureau files, that he broke the radio reporter's window, got into the street fight and seized the photographer's film. There is also a photograph, found in bureau files, that shows Mr. Rowe, his back to the camera, assaulting Mr. Webb.

Messages to Director

When questioned by the investigative force in 1979, the agent in charge of Mr. Rowe at that time immediately recognized him in the photograph. Bureau documents from 1961 show that the agent and Mr. Rowe drew up a numbered list of persons in the photograph and sent the list to Washington. But the space beside Mr. Rowe's number was blank, and the bureau's Birmingham office assured Washington that Mr. Rowe "was not personally involved at the Trailways bus depot."

Although the names of Mr. Rowe's four "handlers" were deleted from the Times copy of the report, bureau documents indicate that the handler at the time of the Freedom Riders was Barrett G. Kemp, the agent who recruited Mr. Rowe to join the Klan. Other agents who have acknowledged working with Mr. Rowe are Byron McFall, now retired; J. Brooke Blake, now a bank officer in Atlanta, and Neal Shanahan, an agent in Philadelphia.

The investigative force also found messages in bureau files in Birmingham indicating that Mr. Hoover was informed in advance that the Birmingham police and the Klan, with Mr. Rowe as a go-between, were plotting to ambush the Freedom Riders.

One teletype message from the Birmingham office to Mr. Hoover quoted the segregationist Police Commissioner at the time, Eugene T. (Bull) Connor, as saying that he wanted the riders beaten until "it looked like a bulldog got a hold of them." Mr. Hoover was also informed that the police had promised the Klan 15 to 20 minutes to beat the riders.

F.B.I. Inaction Criticized

Bureau files show that Mr. Hoover was further informed that Mr. Rowe had been appointed to lead one of the attack squads at the bus terminal.

The report states that "in hindsight, it is indeed unfortunate that the bureau did not take additional action to prevent violence, such as notifying the Attorney General and the United States Marshals Service, who might have been able to do something." "The bureau did conduct an exhaustive investigation after the incident, except perhaps as to Rowe's involvement," it adds.

The Rowe investigative force was directed by Ralph Hornblower 3d, a former Justice Department lawyer. Its members were three Justice Department lawyers, Donald R. Burkhalter, John R. Fieder and William M. Logan, and a Justice Department researcher, Marydale Drury.

The task force operated under the supervision of Michael Shaheen, counsel in the Office of Professional Responsibility in the Justice Department.

Although its main mission was to investigate Mr. Rowe's alleged wrongdoings, the force discovered that a tip by the informer possibly prevented the assassination of the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham's main black civil rights leader. According to bureau documents, a Klan Grand Dragon told Mr. Rowe of a plan to have Mr. Shuttlesworth stabbed to death at a lunch counter sit-in and that Mr. Rowe reported this to agents. The force found that the bureau warned Mr. Shuttlesworth to stay away.

Findings on Alleged Killing

The report does not support Mr. Rowe's accusation that John Doar, the former Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, instructed him to lie about the identity of an eyewitness in the Luzzo case. Various documents show that Mr. Doar instructed Mr. Rowe to tell the truth about his doubts that Leroy Moton, a key government witness, was with Mrs. Luzzo when she died.

On the alleged death of the unidentified black man, the investigative force's report differs sharply with the findings of the Birmingham police. The police concluded from hospital records that Mr. Rowe shot, but did not kill, a black man named Thomas Lyman. The Federal force cited coroner's records stating that Mr. Lyman was hit by a piece of cement.

Mr. McFall, Mr. Rowe's handler in 1963, denied that Mr. Rowe reported the alleged incident to him in that year and that he refused to investigate. But the report confirms that Mr. Rowe recounted the alleged incident "five or six times" to an F.B.I. agent as early as 1965, according to his handler at that time, apparently Mr. Shanahan. Asked why he did not investigate, the agent told the task force, "By the time I heard the story, it was far enough removed in time that I didn't feel any overwhelming obligation to institute any investigation about it and I didn't."

Another agent, apparently Mr. Blake, told the Federal force that he permitted Mr. Rowe to hit citizens even though the informer's "fist was probably as dangerous as some dangerous weapons."

Investigation of Leak of Rowe Report to Press

We request that the Bureau conduct an investigation into the facts surrounding the apparent unauthorized disclosure of the Rowe Task Force Report to the New York Times. Because of the content of that report, such an unauthorized disclosure raises the strong possibility of violations of not only the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(i)(1), but also Rule 6(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

In a memorandum to the Criminal Division dated February 19, 1980, Michael Shaheen, Jr., Counsel, Office of Professional Responsibility (OPR), noted that on February 17 and February 18, the New York Times carried front-page stories written by its Birmingham, Alabama, based correspondent, Howell Raines, describing and discussing the contents of a report prepared by a Department of Justice Task Force investigating Gary Thomas Rowe. The Task Force, composed of Department of Justice attorneys and supervised by OPR, had been investigating alleged criminal conduct by Rowe during the mid 1960's while he was also an FBI informant on Ku Klux Klan activities in Birmingham, Alabama. The report included summaries of testimony given before a federal grand jury as well as information which, because it could lead to their identification, threatened the safety of other FBI informants and their families. The Task Force submitted its final report in July 1979, and then disbanded.

Despite a departmental decision to delay release of the report in any form at least until state criminal proceedings against Rowe arising from the murder of civil rights worker Viola Liuzzo could be resolved, the Birmingham office of the New York Times received a copy of that report. The identity of the source of the report, the means by which it was transmitted to the Times and the circumstances prompting the unauthorized disclosure are unknown.

We believe that the unauthorized disclosure of the sensitive contents of this report warrants investigation to resolve the questions raised above. We ask that the investigation include, although it certainly need not be restricted to the following:

1Date of transcription 5/20/80

Joseph F. Gross, Assistant United States Attorney (AUSA), District of Nebraska, Omaha, Nebraska, 215 North 17th Street, telephone [redacted] residing at [redacted] telephone [redacted] furnished the following information:

Gross noted he was associated with the Office of Professional Responsibility (OPR), Department of Justice, Washington, D. C., from April or May of 1977, to approximately February of 1980 as an Assistant Counsel.

Gross advised he has no knowledge of who was responsible or how the leak of the Department of Justice Task Force report concerning Gary Thomas Rowe, Jr., was affected. Gross stated he did not personally believe that the releasing of the Task Force report to the media would serve any useful purpose.

Gross noted he had had access to drafts of the Task Force report, as well as the finished product. Gross stated that although the reports were controlled by copy numbers; that is, for example, one of five, two of five, et cetera, it would not have been unusual or against departmental regulations to take such materials from the office space of OPR. Gross further stated that he did not know if all copies of the report were accounted for on a daily basis within OPR.

Gross related there had been no meeting, official or unofficial, held at OPR to announce that the report would not be released to the public prior to the resolution of State charges against Rowe, but added that the timing of the leak coincided with the general decision made not to release the report.
